GalaxE.Solutions, a medical IT company, is setting up shop at 1001 Woodward Ave.

CEO Tim Bryan said he looked nationwide for an inexpensive place to build new offices, and found a great opportunity when he settled on Detroit.

"What you see is great opportunity for expansion. The people that are living here are hardworking, and they're Midwesterners eager for jobs and looking for opportunities," he said.

Bryan said he picked Detroit because he wants to replicate a program he ran in New Jersey.

"We trained underprivileged youths in IT, to have them join our work force. It was a very successful program, but it left us with an appetite for a much larger initiative," he said.

Bryan said he's also looking to hire Michigan college graduates to change a trend.

"They (graduates) appear to be leaving the state in roughly a rate of 50 percent. Well, that's a great opportunity in terms of having people consider this area of Detroit for employment," he said.
