

GalaxE.Solutions CEO and Detroit Regional Chamber President Discuss Viability of Detroit as IT-Hub

DETROIT – GalaxE.Solutions Chairman and CEO Tim Bryan and Detroit Regional Chamber President and CEO Sandy K. Baruah recently presented at the 2011 Detroit CIO Executive Summit in Dearborn, Mich. Their luncheon keynote, titled “The Re-Invention of a Region – Creating IT Employment in Detroit,” addressed hundreds of Fortune 1000 CIOs, along with top government and academic CIOs.

The keynote presentation focused on how Detroit is able to provide a true, viable alternative to sending IT work offshore – ensuring cost, and importantly, quality benefits – while putting Americans back to work as the need for the next-generation of high-level IT software becomes more expansive and sophisticated.

“For the first time ever, when you consider all this city has to offer – from workforce to infrastructure to geography and political considerations – high level IT can be accomplished in Detroit more efficiently than traditional offshore locations.” said Bryan. “This message is especially important to communicate among the CIO community as they make important strategic decisions on where to locate their IT work.”

The CIO Executive Summit is designed to provide peer-to-peer collaboration centering on pressing industry and leadership challenges within the field of information technology. Participants and speakers share best practices to develop leadership skills enhancing the ability to impact the local and global business climate.

Arriving in Campus Martius in April 2010, GalaxE.Solutions is hiring 500 skilled IT workers in downtown Detroit. To date, more than 130 have been hired with immediate openings for 200 additional professionals – well ahead of original estimates and a sign that the “Outsource to Detroit” model is successful and growing with companies nationwide.
